Where to Donate Furniture Locally

You can find local charities in your area that need furniture donations. Before you donate, contact a volunteer or representative at the charity to see if they offer receipts for tax purposes. While donating locally can help people in your neighborhood, make sure you donate to a nonprofit if you want the tax break.

Homeless Shelters

Many homeless shelters and missions operate as Independent charities, especially in urban areas that have a large homeless or at-risk population. These organizations provide shelter and meals to struggling families and accept donations including beds, couches, tables, and other small odds and ends. The United Way can provide you with a list of local homeless shelters in your area.

Battered Women's Shelters

Battered women's shelters help victims of abuse and their children by providing them with a safe place to stay while they begin to rebuild their lives. Many of these organizations accept donations of used furniture and household items in good condition. Search your local newspaper's website or online to find battered women's shelters in your area.

Local Thrift Stores

Many local thrift stores accept gently used furniture donations for resale. Many thrift stores donate a portion of their proceeds to charity, and donations to nonprofit thrift stores are tax deductible. Use caution when donating items to thrift stores, however. Many are not nonprofit organizations, so double check with a manager before you donate.

Theater Groups

Amateur theater groups often need furniture donations to build sets. Occasionally, they accept extremely beat-up furniture, or furniture you cannot donate anywhere else. You can find a local theater group by visiting your city's website. City websites usually have an entertainment section that lists local theater groups. You can also contact theater departments at local high schools or colleges.

Freecycle

Freecycle is not a charity organization. Users join the site and post ads for anything they want to give away, including furniture. Other users can browse the ads and schedule a time to pick up the items they want. You won't get a tax break by using Freecycle, but you can help some needy families in your neighborhood.
